YOUR TEAM

Kan Thissamone

ECC Vet Technician - Elephant Manager

Kan Thissamone is a leading figure in elephant health and welfare in Laos. He began his career delivering emergency care to logging elephants with ElefantAsia's Mobile Vet Clinic. In 2012, Kan joined the founding team at the Elephant Conservation Center and helped design Laos' first Elephant Hospital. Today, he plays a vital role in ECC's daily operations — overseeing health checks, nutrition plans, positive reinforcement training, and mahout support. His deep field-based knowledge and years of hands-on experience make him a trusted mentor for mahouts and a key speaker at conservation workshops across Asia. Kan's commitment to elephant welfare continues to shape best practices in Laos and beyond.

Moukthida Vilasith

ECC Vet - WILDMED Mobile Elephant Clinic

Moukthida “Mouk” Vilasith is a dedicated wildlife veterinarian at the Elephant Conservation Center in Sayaboury. With a strong focus on elephant health, she supports ECC's breeding, rewilding, and veterinary programmes. Mouk has trained with international institutions such as the Denver Zoo and Smithsonian Conservation Biology Institute, expanding her skills in both laboratory analysis and fieldwork. In addition to her clinical work, she actively participates in youth education programmes across Laos, representing ECC at events organised by Econox and the Anoulak Association. Through her expertise and passion, Mouk helps bridge the gap between conservation science and community engagement — inspiring future generations to care for wildlife.

Keo Inthavong

ECC Mahout - Wild Elephant Monitoring Unit

Keo Inthavong represents a new generation of Lao mahouts driven by passion. Keo joined ECC in 2018 to help care for elephants rescued from trafficking. His gentle and observant approach quickly stood out, and in 2019 he joined ECC's rewilding programme. Since then, he has worked deep in the Nam Pouy National Protected Area, monitoring rewilded elephants as they adapt to forest life. Keo's work is critical to ensuring these elephants' long-term survival in the wild, and his story reflects the growing role of passionate, conservation-minded youth in shaping the future of elephant care in Laos.

Jamie Russell

ECC Biologist - Elephant Behavior and Welfare

Jamie Russell is a wildlife biologist at the Elephant Conservation Center. He supports the ECC's elephant management, rehabilitation, research, and breeding programs, and contributes to education efforts through talks and outreach. Jamie holds a BSc in Animal Behavior from Indiana University Bloomington. He has a background in avian fieldwork, having worked on migration monitoring, breeding behavior surveys, and raptor research across the United States. His experience in behavioral data collection and fieldwork, combined with experience in guiding and education, support the ECC's efforts in improving elephant welfare and fostering public understanding of elephant conservation.

SCIENCE & CONSERVATION

International Partnerships

The ECC collaborates with leading international institutions to advance elephant conservation in Laos. In partnership with the Smithsonian Institution (USA), we analyse hormones (testosterone, cortisol, progesterone) and collect DNA from wild elephant populations. Our endocrinology lab is funded by the Australian Embassy in Laos, while Asian Elephant Support contributes to veterinary care. The French institute IRD partners with us to study elephant feeding and self-medication behaviours, and Des Éléphants et Des Hommes, Wyss Academy for NAture (Switzerland) and Eco-Faune (France) support our “Kids in Conservation” education programme.

Participants in Back to the Wild, Laos directly contribute to these ongoing research and education initiatives.

BACK TO THE WILD

Back to the Wild, Laos is open to anyone passionate about protecting nature. Whether you're an enthusiast or a professional in conservation, biology, veterinary care, botany, or related fields, your contribution is welcome. With a wide range of tasks involved, there's space for anyone eager to support one of Laos' most biodiverse regions.

DIFFICULTY

Trekking in a tropical forest environment can be strenuous. The first days spent at the Elephant Conservation Center are accessible to anyone fit enough to undertake short walks on rough terrain. But the Nam Pouy National Protected Area is much more challenging. With steep climbs and slopes, untouched secondary forest, high levels of heat and moist and the ubiquitous mosquitoes and leeches, it is highly recommended to participants to equip themselves with adequate gear and have prior knowledge of this kind of environment.
